

National Day of Truth and Reconciliation

September 30th is the National day for Truth and Reconciliation

It's a day of reflection, remembrance, and acknowledgement to honour the lives lost, the survivors, and those impacted by the residential school system in Canada.

Listening and learning about the residential school experience and the intergenerational harm it caused is one way we can continue to deepen our understanding and build collaborative, respectful, long-term relationships with Indigenous Peoples, governments, communities and businesses.

While having a federal holiday is an important first step, ensuring all Canadians meaningfully engage with Indigenous communities and in solidarity is critical to achieving the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada's call to Action #80.
