WILD SCULPTURE RECREATION TRAIL

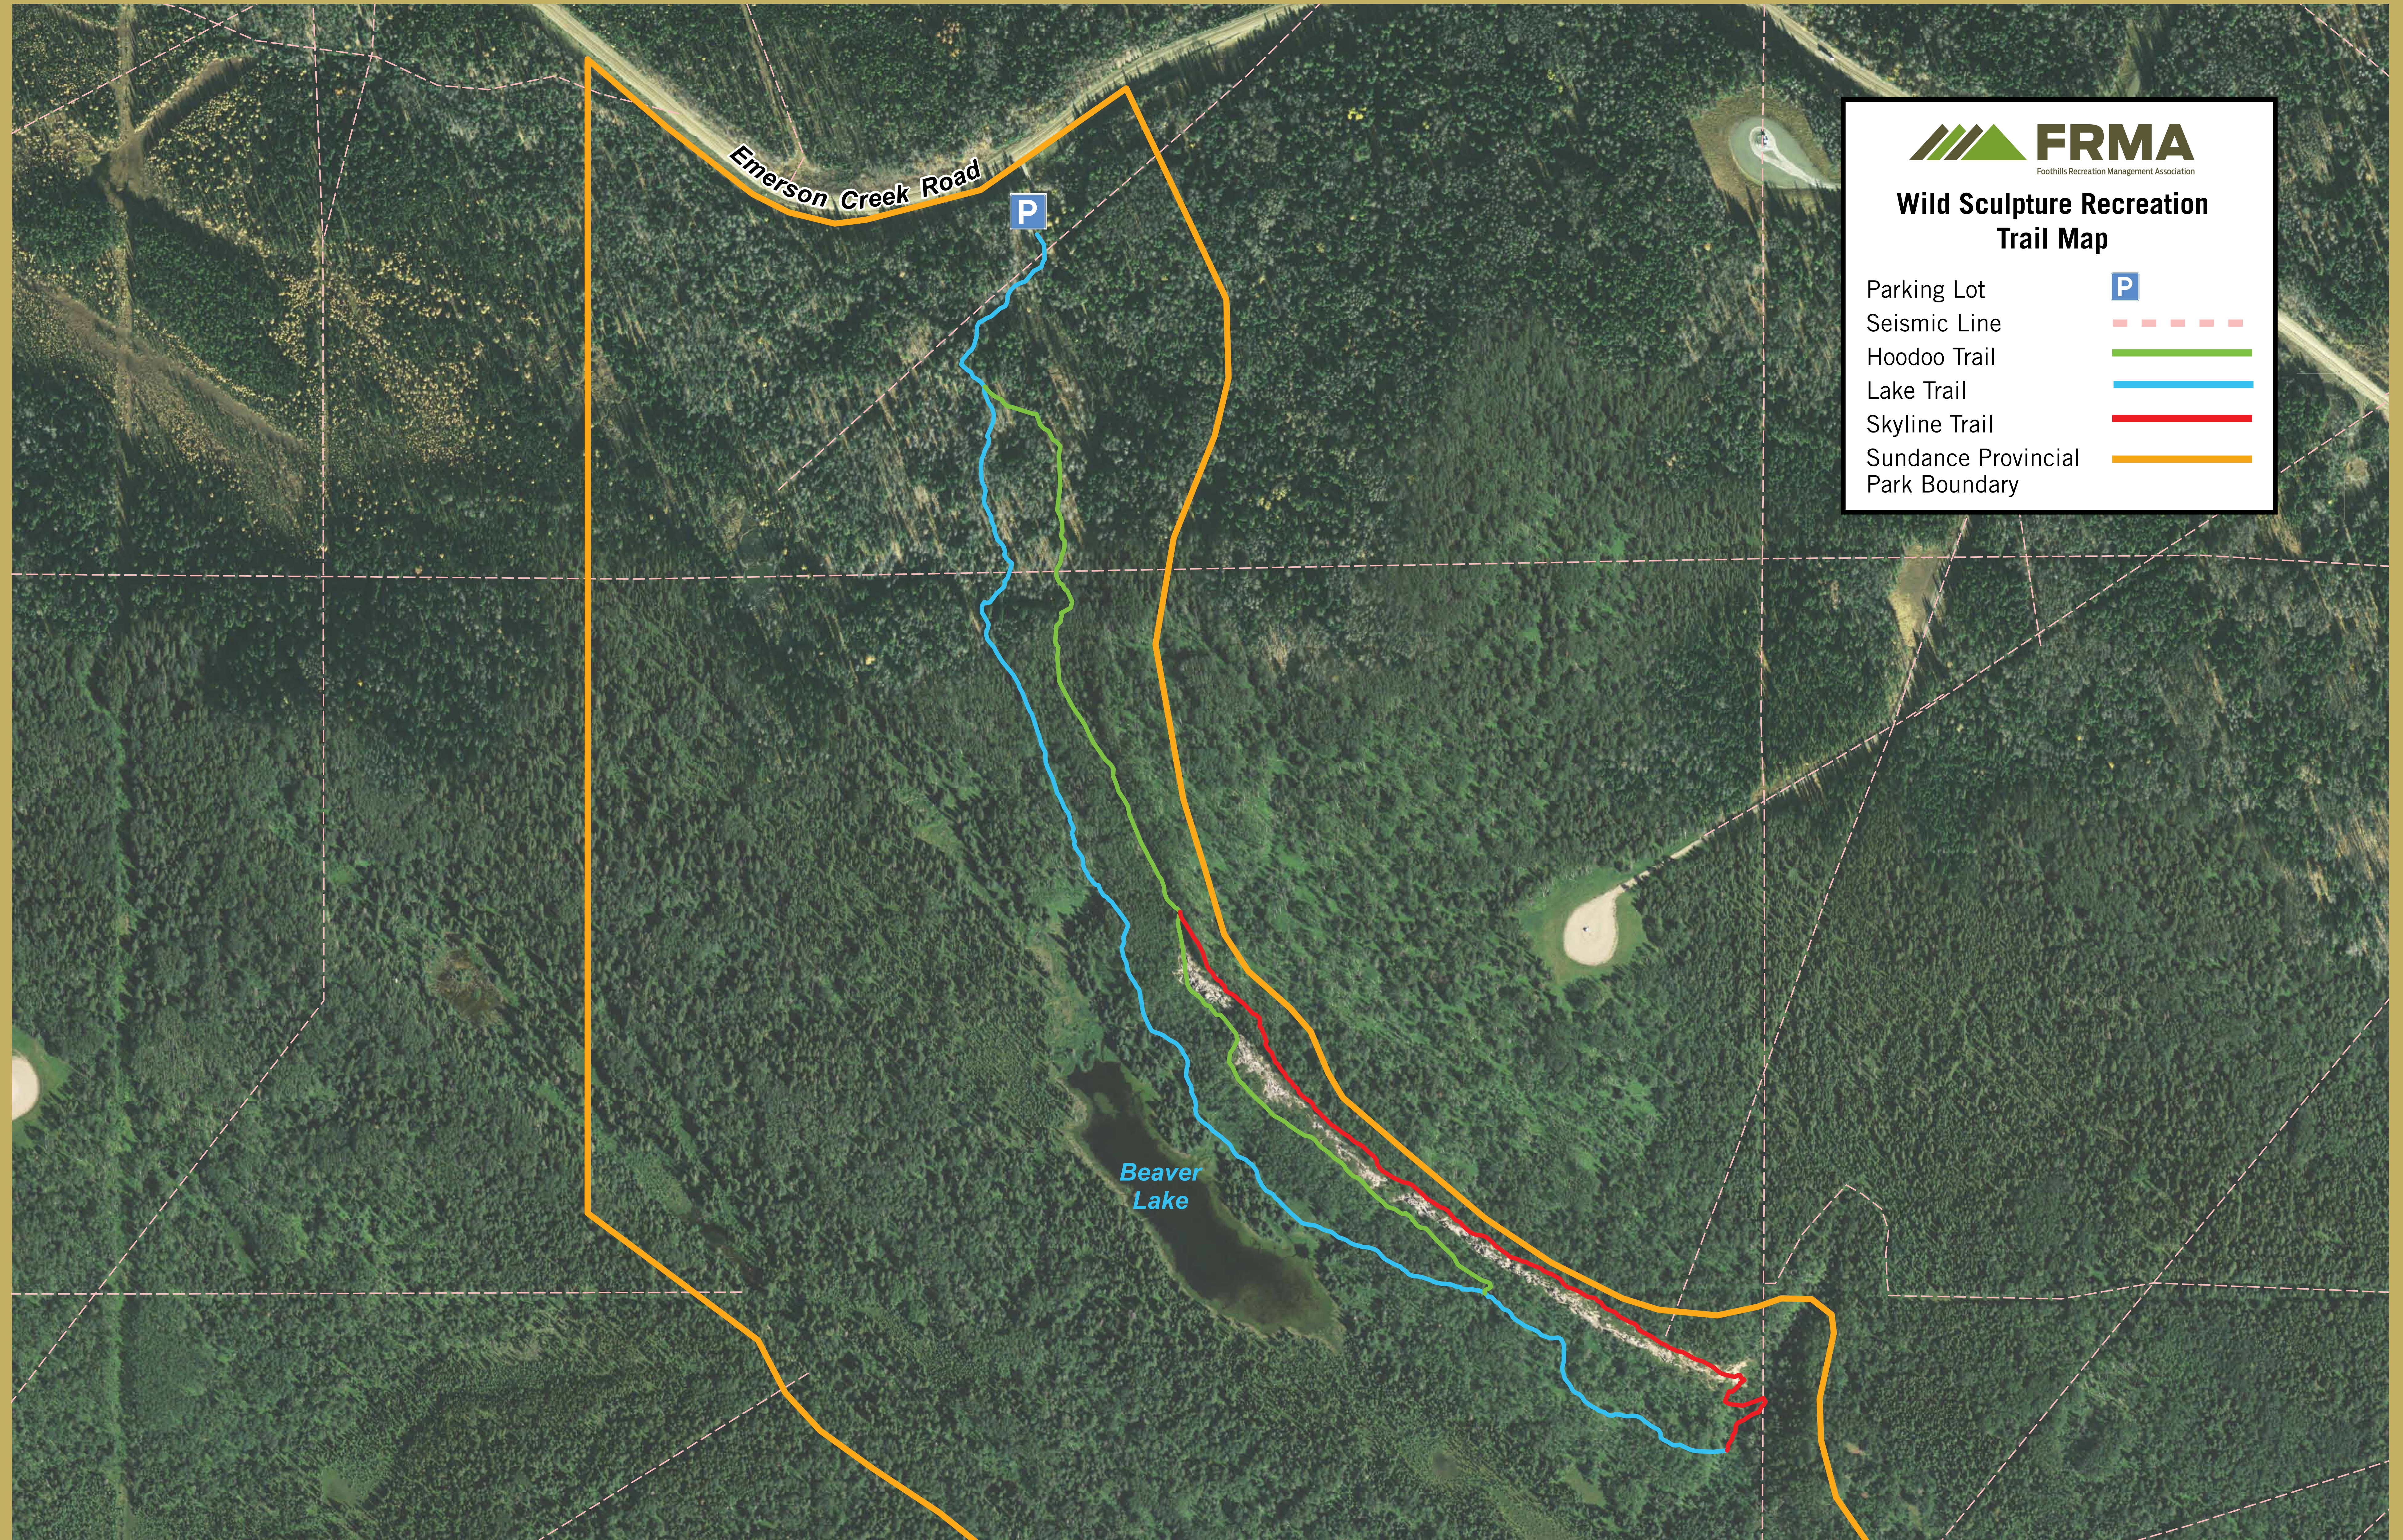

The Wild Sculpture Trail offers a rare opportunity to view formations of sandstone that have been naturally sculpted by the wind. The rock sculptures reveal the peculiar geological design of the variable density sandstone that occurs in this unique valley. The Sundance Valley is narrow and protected with ridges rising above wooded slopes that descend sharply to the deep, clear waters of Sundance Lake. The spectacular skyline views of the valley are a great photo opportunity during all seasons.

The Wild Sculpture Trail is part of Sundance Provincial Park. The Foothills Recreation Management Association, in partnership with the provincial government, manages and maintains this trail.

TRAIL DESCRIPTIONS

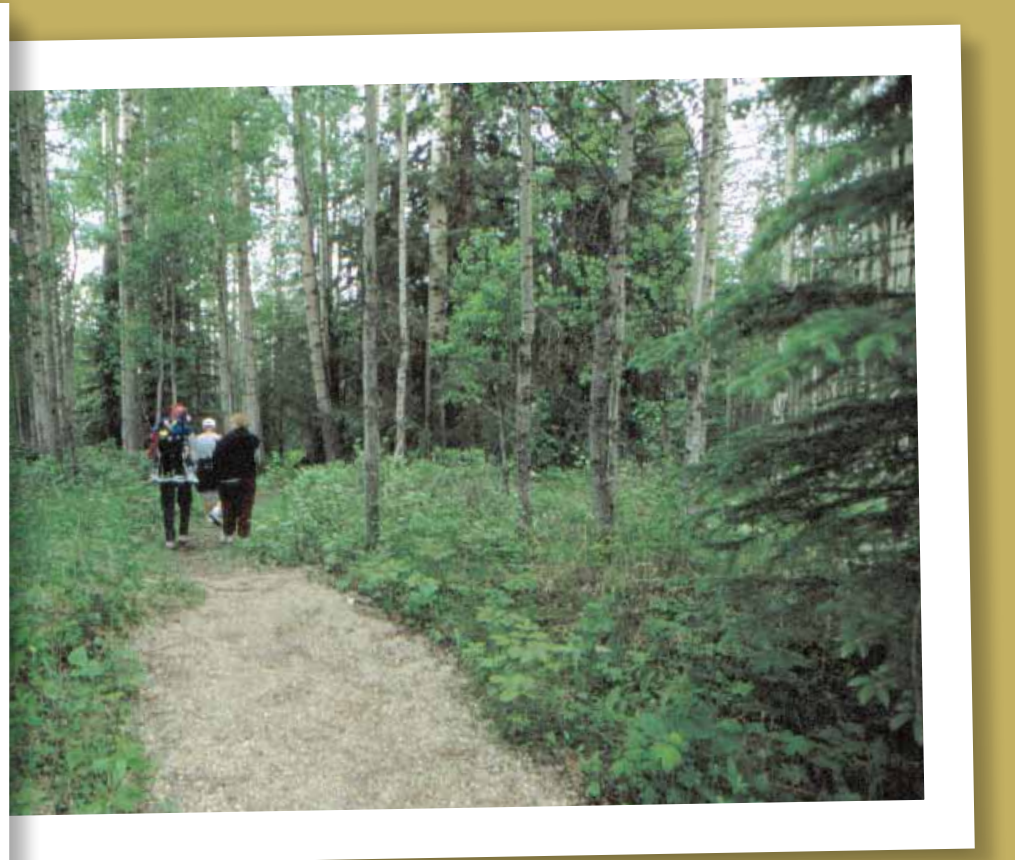

The Wild Sculpture Trail is approximately 2 kilometres in length (one way). The hoodoos occur between kilometre one and two, making them accessible to those who desire a short, spectacular hike. The forest in this area reveals the diverse plant life that is specifically indigenous to the area. Abundant populations of beaver and waterfowl can be observed on Beaver Lake. Moose, deer, bear, marten, and many types of songbirds are only some examples of the other species that also call this valley home.

There is an un-maintained, poorly-used, trail that travels further into the Park from the south end of the Wild Sculpture Trail. This un-maintained trail travels along the north side of the three lakes found within the Park. There are also several un-maintained creek crossings – travel this trail at your own risk and be prepared for a wilderness experience.

SAFETY

Please be prepared and use the trail at your own risk. Remember - YOU are responsible for your own safety. As in all wilderness settings, bears may be encountered at any time. To reduce the chance of a bear encounter, make plenty of noise to alert the bear to your presence. NEVER feed or approach a bear.

The Foothills Recreation Management Association is a group of companies, municipalities and organizations operating in the Foothills of Alberta with a belief that providing safe, affordable and enjoyable recreation opportunities for the public is part of our mandate.
